AH, THOSE GOOD OLD DAYS OF HEALTH CARE

Jill Dougal's PeaceHealth article (“PeaceHealth Has Lost Its Way”) in the Nov. 30 issue of Eugene Weekly brought back some memories for me from about 12 or 15 years ago, when the then-CEO of RiverBend Hospital happened to blow by my house one day passing out some kind of religious literature. As a result of my wife's employment at RiverBend, I happened to recognize his face and went out of my way to compliment him on his flashy purple tie.

As I recall, he held his position at the hospital for about three years at something like $750,000 per year (I'll let you do the math on that). I believe his main job requirements were to run an occasional meeting and write the weekly pep letter for the RiverBend staff. He eventually resigned his position and headed back East looking for another CEO position at a hospital with enough chumps on the hospital board to sign another high dollar contract with him.

Having been around the local Providence medical facilities from the heyday of Sacred Heart University District Hospital in south Eugene, I find it a pity that nowadays the Catholics can't rustle up enough nuns to run their hospitals. Things were so much more cheery at Providence medical institutions back in the good old days.

THANKS FOR ENABLING HONEST DIALOGUE

I want to thank you for running Josh Fattal's Nov. 30 Viewpoint “The Facts on Palestine.” It was refreshing to hear a highly educated citizen speak bluntly about the situation in Israel-Palestine. It made me feel I'm not alone in feeling outraged and appalled by what is currently happening in Palestine at the hands of the Israeli government in the name of the Jewish state and “peace.”

I'm glad to see our local paper is willing to publish on this issue, and I urge you to continue enabling dialogue on this topic, despite any threats you may be receiving.

This is a moment in history when it is crucial for the voices of ordinary citizens, and perhaps those of American Jews, in particular, to be heard and for us to look soberly at the reality of what our country is supporting. Healing and learning come from authentic expression, honest listening and engaged dialogue, not from silencing, censoring or canceling those who are brave enough to speak out or even those who make a mistake in a public forum.

I appreciate your commitment to publishing what's real. Stay strong!

UPLIFTING PERFORMANCE BY UO ENSEMBLE

Last Sunday evening I attended the performance of the University of Oregon Gospel Ensemble. I wish to congratulate the students and their director, Andiel Brown, on a truly uplifting evening. Some of their selections were joyous; others brought me to tears. Chris Schroepel's arrangement of “He Won't Hold You” was incredibly moving. I look forward to the next performance in March. Congratulations!

Nature During Wartime

OLENA KRAVCHENKO AND EUGENE NONPROFIT ENVIRONMENTAL LAW ALLIANCE
HAVE TEAMED UP TO RESTORE UKRAINE'S WAR-TORN FORESTS

By Emerson Brady

On Oct. 20 Olena Kravchenko was with a team of environmental scientists taking a soil sample to test it for chemicals in Kamianska Sich National Nature Park in southern Ukraine when she saw, at the corner of her eye, Russian drones circling her team.

Kravchenko and her team had to make a snap decision: finish collecting their soil samples and risk what comes next or flee to safety. Believing there was enough time, they went ahead and attempted to finish collecting their samples. Then she heard the bombs.

"We heard them warn us, and then we got bombed," Kravchenko says. "We just jumped in the car to some agricultural field, and we survived."

Kravchenko is the executive director of Environmental People Law (EPL) in Ukraine. EPL is based out of Kyiv and has a full in-person working staff of lawyers and scientists. The nonprofit has been a leader in helping create domestic environmental legislation change and raising funds to support research on the environmental impacts of the war. With the help of Eugene nonprofit Environmental Law Alliance, ELAW, she is working towards creating a plan to restore wildlands and forests that have been destroyed by Russia's war on Ukraine.

"Nature is the silent victim in Ukraine," Kravchenko says. "And we have to be the voice of this nature."

Kravchenko first visited Eugene 15 years ago to see family that lived here and to meet with ELAW about supporting EPL. The two organizations have had a working relationship ever since.

ELAW Communications Director and Fellowship Program Director Maggie Keenan says that ELAW primarily lends financial support as well as access to the scientists and research that EPL may need to come up with Ukraine's restoration plan. Keenan adds that ELAW currently has six scientists on staff with a variety of focus areas that include environmental restoration as well as a public health economist and a legal team. "We have been working with EPL for decades now and we are just in awe of their work and commitment to protect Ukrainians and their natural environment," she says.

The first step to addressing the destruction is assessing the damage. Based on EPL's research, 30 percent of Ukraine's land has been contaminated with toxic chemicals from bombs, she says. For example, when Russia bombs pesticide storage warehouses, all of those chemicals seep into the soil. Some of the soil affected can be cleaned with the right technology, she says, but a lot of the soil is destroyed forever.

"We don't have any of the right tools and technology to deal with this," Kravchenko says. "If you don't have enough domestic legislation, you don't have enough technology to solve this problem. We need help from democratic countries around the world."

Another 30 percent of the Ukrainian land is littered with landmines, Kravchenko says. She has been researching other war-torn countries that have dealt with digging up land mines and found that demining Albania took about 20 years. She estimates that Ukraine will need 30 to 50 years to complete the demining process.

"We lost over 3 million hectares [roughly 7.4 million acres] of forest," Kravchenko says. "Which means the next generation will not be able to see the unique Ukrainian nature which we had before. My grandchildren will never see the unique native plants I saw."

She estimates that restoring the nature that has been destroyed by Russian troops will cost billions of dollars. One of the ways that Kravchenko is tackling the issue is by trying to get new legislation passed in regards to environmental inspection. EPL and Ukraine's Ministry of Environment are working together to create stronger legislation Ukrainian environmental enforcement and liability.

Kravchenko would like to get to the point where Ukraine could charge Russia with "ecocide," and has pointed to international alliance groups like Stop Ecocide International in Europe as key players in advocating to get ecocide in the Rome Statute, which established four core international crime: genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and the crime of aggression.

However, Ukraine has not ratified the Rome Statute. The U.S. and Russia are also among the 123 countries that are not party to it.

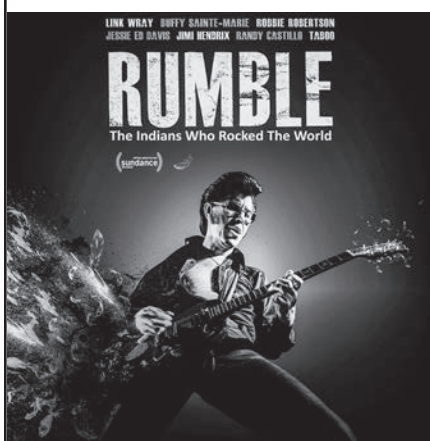

"We are pushing for the government to ratify the Rome Statute because without ratification, it is so difficult to apply this new case to the International Criminal Court," Kravchenko says.

Most recently, Kravchenko took a trip to Brussels and Berlin to meet with the directorate generals for the environment in the European Commission to discuss what a green recovery plan for Ukraine could look like and how other countries in the European Union can assist.

"We are still just trying to figure out how we can push the government in the right direction to make a green recovery plan possible," Kravchenko says. ■ right now: Nicholas Kristof writes about it in the Sunday, Dec. 10, New York Times: Modern versions of rooming houses are helping to solve housing shortages. Betty Taylor, retired Eugene city councilor of 20 years, has long been an advocate of rooming houses as an interim solution. We're in favor of whatever it takes to get people off the streets and into shelter.

• And a correction: Last week we celebrated environmental justice nonprofit Cascadia Wildlands's 25th anniversary by giving readers an inside look into how the group got started and what the future holds for those tree huggers. In the piece we reported that Cascadia Wildlands had stopped "hundreds of thousands" of timber sales. That would be a wildly impressive feat, but Cascadia co-founder Josh Laughlin points out that the nonprofit actually stopped hundreds of thousands of acres of timber sales, not hundreds of thousands of timber sales.

EUGENE'S ONE AND ONLY ICE RINK NEEDS HALF A MILLION DOLLARS TO COMPLETE ICE-SAVING RENOVATIONS SUCH AS A NEW REFRIGERATION UNIT AND COILS BY EMERSON BRADY

Bob Carolyn laces up his hockey skates for yet another one of many Friday afternoon hockey scrimmages held at The Rink Exchange. Carolyn, 82, is one of 25 or so middle-aged and older men who filed into the ice rink that Friday afternoon wearing business casual clothes and holding duffel bags the size of small children. Outside the rink these men are dentists, grandpas or businessmen, but on Friday afternoons they're boys who want to skate on some ice and hit each other with sticks.

"I can remember, particularly after the rink opened,

I would have, you know, just a horrible day of work and aches and pains and just tired," Carolyn says. "But as soon as I stepped out on the ice all the aches and pains just went away."

Carolyn was one of the first people to skate at The Rink Exchange at the Lane County Event Center. He has been there since the day it opened — Dec. 22, 1989. If the ice rink isn't able to get the funding and contract it needs to survive, he could be one of the last.

On Oct. 15, The Rink Exchange, which is owned by Hockey Oregon, sent a letter to Lane County Board of Commissioners asking for support in replacing decades old ice-making chillers, coils, heat exchanges and various other equipment that has not been replaced in its 34 years of operation. The letter also asks the county to change The Rink Exchange's lease to a long-term agreement rather than year-to-year lease, so that remodeling the rink will be worth the time and money.

One proposal is to allow The Rink Exchange to lease the livestock building during renovations, but Lane County Fair Manager Corey Buller says the county can't make any decisions involving the lease of the livestock building until Lane County commissioners decide whether the Eugene Emeralds are moving their stadium to Lane County Events Center.

this position you need to know a little bit of its complicated history.

The Rink Exchange, formerly known as Lane County Ice Arena, has been the home to a variety of ice sports clubs and teams in Lane County. The University of Oregon Ducks club hockey team has played at the rink since the rink's opening, the Eugene Figure Skating Club graced the rink in 1991, and a junior league hockey team, the Eugene Generals, dominated the rink in 2005.

The Rink Exchange was owned by the county from its opening in 1989 until 2010, when Lane County commissioners decided that maintaining an ice rink was getting to be too expensive. That's where current General Manager of The Rink Exchange Flint Doungchak enters the rink.

Doungchak has been entranced by hockey since the first L.A. Kings game he went to when he was 10. He says after that game, he was hooked, and he played all throughout high school and at the University of Oregon. When Doungchak moved to Eugene for school, one of the first things he did was grab a phone book and look for the closest ice rink.

"I literally jumped on the bus, went to the rink and that same day was asked to coach youth hockey," Doungchak says. He started volunteer coaching that day and never stopped.

Doungchak worked his daytime job as a software engineer but coached a wide range of youth hockey by night. When Ken Owens, founder of the Generals, approached him about working as a general manager for the team, Doungchak wasn't initially sold.

Doungchak says, "I told him hockey was my passion, but not something I could make a living at and a pretty dramatic salary difference, but that I would help start the Generals since I had so much experience coaching." He gave Owens 18 months. As it turned out, he managed the Generals for 15 years. The Generals have taken a break since 2019 due to a lack of nearby playing partners.

In 2010, "when the county announced they were closing the rink, Ken specifically said to me, 'Hey, it's either the Generals operate the rink or it closes. What do you want to do?' — and so we did it," Doungchak says.

Doungchak and Owens had little to no experience running or maintaining a facility of that caliber. He recalls the horror of driving a Zamboni for the first time and the learning curve that comes with figuring out how to keep the ice cool and dry.

Doungchak and his team also had to figure out how to make the ice. Doungchak says that he and his team cover the rink with thin sheets of premade ice and then spray that down with a hose to create the ice. After the ice is painted white, then more clear sheets of ice are put on top until it is an inch thick.

"I was a software engineer. I was staring at a computer all day and maybe talking to people. I would say me turning a wrench was very rare," Doungchak says. "And now that's not the case at all."

He recalls the first year of just figuring out what was already broken while also trying to fix what was actively breaking. Doungchak says he really owes it to community members for volunteering their time to help when it was needed most, such as hockey families coming out to help repaint the building, and local vendors that can help fix their forklift and refrigeration.

"I remember when it snowed a few years back and we were closed because there was six inches of snow on the ground and me and Toshia [Holden, operations manager] and Daniel [Gomez, facilities director] were here just emptying pipes so they wouldn't burst, but then people started showing up to skate," Doungchak says. "It really was just like, wow, it is 7 degrees out here and people still want to be here."

Now, The Rink Exchange community is once again rallying behind Doungchak by setting up a fundraiser to help pay the costs of renovating the ice-making chillers that make the ice cold as well as the coils that move the cooling air from the chillers evenly around the rink.

He says they need to raise roughly $500,000 in order to replace the refrigeration unit and coils. So far, The Rink Exchange has raised nearly $80,000 from large donors, and the small donor campaign is opening up "very soon."

Doungchak says construction would have to begin in March because he fears the ice will melt during the warmer months. During construction The Rink Exchange would either lease the livestock building to allow them to operate as an ice facility in the meantime or close the rink from March until August for construction.

However, if the Eugene Emeralds build a new stadium at the Lane County fairgrounds, Buller says, the livestock building will need to be demolished. Until the county makes a decision about the new stadium, he adds, The Rink Exchange renovation is essentially at a standstill.

Allan Benavides, general manager of the Eugene Emeralds, says that to his knowledge the new stadium should not impact The Rink Exchange at all, and that he is hopeful the two can coexist within the Lane County Events Center.

Doungchak says he isn't too worried about gathering the funds to replace the refrigeration unit and coils. He says that he thinks once the rink can prove that it has raised at least half of the money necessary for renovations, then the county will start to take their requests more seriously. So far, the county has not responded to Doungchak and Rink Exchange's letter about extending its lease.

As Owens watches the old men trickle onto the rink he can't help but feel optimistic that the community will come together despite all the turmoil. "It's really just another bump in the road," he says. "We have a lot of good folks here from tons of different walks of life. I mean, you can't even hardly put your finger on all of them. And they have one thing in common, and that's skating here." ■

Ah, another Christmas season is upon us, with all its glorious lights and festivities. “A poor excuse for picking a man’s pocket every 25th of December!” says Ebenezer Scrooge in A Christmas Carol. Don’t be like the downhearted Scrooge. Instead, experience the life-affirming laughs of the season for three performances with The No Script Society Improv in A Scriptless Carol. The rotating 15-member troupe will be mining the audience for ideas to ad-lib about — well, almost anything related to the holidays based loosely on cues from the Charles Dickens classic tale — and audience participation is strongly encouraged. “We’re hoping it’s going to be our biggest, most ambitious show,” says Adam Leonard, an organizer for the three-day production. The No Script Society Improv started at Very Little Theatre shortly before the COVID pandemic. It wasn’t until this past summer (“It took a little longer than I wanted,” Leonard says) that the group returned, but it returned to a packed house at VLT’s Stage Left. “We really love what we’re doing,” he says. “We’re impressed with the people coming out. There’s a hunger for improv.”
